Linda Mason page 200 • You have absolutely no idea how excited we are to be working with make-up artist Linda Mason. Linda was the first artist to apply make-up to models before a fashion show. Before Linda, they did it themselves. Imagine a model applying their own make-up these days – it simply wouldn't happen. Be aware we're dealing with a legend here. And it gets better: when we heard Linda was channelling the painterly genius of Francis Bacon, we had to take the whole afternoon off. And drink liquids for a week. And then when we heard it would all be recorded for your enjoyment by talented snapper Richard Burbridge, well, we collapsed. Take a look at the shoot for yourself and see. We salute thee, Linda.

Jason Kibbler page 276 • When Jason met Sophia, what a lovely time was had. Picture editor-in-chief Sophia Neophitou in a sexy dress and Jason Kibbler giving great image. We love what they've done together and, according to spies on set, Jason was incredibly professional and nice all day long. It's good to see that some men still have good manners. Thank you, Jason, for being so damn nice. Back to the pictures: clock the set in the background – it's terrific. It's the same colour as the bathroom in our Lynne's timeshare in Tenerife, too. Mind you, it'll be a darn sight cleaner. She's always been a bit mucky, our Lynne, and those kids of hers – don't get us started on them, readers.

Hector Castro page 228 • His luscious tanned skin, sexy brown eyes and liking for dressing in black often has Hector mistaken for Zorro. "Whip out your wand, Zorro," shout passers-by and he just smiles and waves. Hector has always got a good word to say about everybody and is the model of sobriety and a refreshing moral crusader in an otherwise-sinful fashion industry. When he isn't capturing Louis Vuitton in exceptional profile shoots, he can be found handing out soup to homeless people on London's Strand every Saturday night. Recently, though, Hector caught something – we can't go any further, but it's all cleared up now. (We just made that up, by the way.)

Dirty Martini page 126 • "Hello, burlesque fans and fellow artistes, my name's Dirty... what's yours?!" A fittingly flirty introduction on Miss Dirty Martini's homepage. This "international burlesque sensation" of ample proportions is the model, nay, shining star of our shoot by Mario Sorrenti. Miss Martini jiggles her gorgeous jugs in a terribly artistic fashion at various fashion hotspots around the globe. See her dance with a feathered fan, with boobey tassels on, behind pink balloons, and so on. We're all for the fuller figure at Ten Towers, especially as we're somewhat fuller-figured ourselves. Indeed, there's many a time we've sat around the office totally NUDE, waiting for an express delivery from DHL.

Frank B page 126 • If we were to tell you that Frank B used to be a graffiti artist, breaking into train yards and spraying the locomotives pink at night, while assisting photographer Mario Sorrenti during the day, we'll have you hooked, right? Now read this: we've been told that Frank's father was hairdresser to – GET READY – Judy Garland [Gasps.]

(but then, Sophia does love to make up a story). Apparently, when one Ten Towers fag heard of this, he did three tiny drops of wee. Filthy. And now here follows an impressive list of photographers Frank has worked with: Steven Klein, Herb Ritts, Patrick Demarchelier, Terry Richardson, Alexei Hay, among many glorious others.
